

James Buzzell has over 2 decades of experience in the excavation and construction domain. He has been with GoliathTech for over 5 years. His role is to train new installers, and to work closely with them in the field to tackle new challenges. He also is part of the design team for all new helical pile products giving him an intimate working knowledge of products and their applications. He has done numerous presentations and webinars in front of engineers, contractors, architects and geo-techs answering questions and explaining the advantages of Helical piles and the details to verify for proper specification and installation.